Gratings in the Corals of Great Barrier Reef: Relationships between the geometry of a single colony and its surrounding colonies. Coral reefs are considered to be ecosystem engineers. They create ecosystems and have been involved in speciation of marine organisms in different regions of the world. Most corals are colonial and their growth and expansion is related to the surrounding environment. In order to build a better understanding of the factors and processes shaping the reef structure, we used three-dimensional geometric morphometrics to characterize the geometry of individual colonies from among large coral assemblages in the central part of the Great Barrier Reef. The colonies were measured at the surface and in the middle of the body of the corals. We found a strong relationship between the volume-related shape of a coral colony and the shape of the surface of other colonies surrounding it. Furthermore, using two-way ANOVA, we analyzed the inter-relationships between coral colony volume, the volume of colonies located in its three-dimensional surrounding space and the volume of adjacent colonies at the surrounding surface. We found a strong relationship between the volume of the coral colony and the total volume of its surrounding colonies at the surrounding surface, but little relationship between the volume of the coral colony and the volume of colonies located in its surrounding three-dimensional space. In addition, we found a strong relationship between the volume of the colony and its surrounding colony's volume on its surrounding surface, and between the volume of colonies on its surrounding surface and the colony volume. Athletics at the 2004 Summer Paralympics – Men's 100 metres T34 The Men's 100m T34 athletics events for the 2004 Summer Paralympics were held at the Athens Olympic Stadium from 28 August to 1 September. Events were held in three disability classes. This event is generally held in T34 classes. The times were brought down for the competition as they were judged to be not fast enough to warrant an automatic qualification for the next round. This is the more usual format, and would mean that the entry is open to slowest competitors. This happened to the individual class gold medalists as well, Andrew Gardner and Hislop settled for silver, after being overtaken by Curran.
